Starving on the Ocean. An onnce of food and a gill of water a day for eighteen days is the story of a shipwrecked craw landed at New York Wednesday morning. The crew was taken from the British schooner Little Wonder, and comprised Captain Hancock and four men. The Allan State Line steamship Siberian had picked them up at sea and brought

On September 4 the Little Wonder set sail from Domin, Labrador, with a cargo of many thousand pounds of cod. She was a 98-ton boat. For two days she steamed away toward the English channel. Then a gale struck her. It came from the northwest, and grew fiercer. The wind and the waves were too much for the little craft, and the incessant staggering shifted the cargo. Then she tumbised over on her beam ends and was helpless. The water poured over the deck, smashing everything it struck. The tasks containing fresh water were swept overboard. The see poured down into the oabin and scaked all the provisions with sait water, destroying the greater por-On September 4 the Little Wonder set sail with sa't water, destroying the greater por-tion. Must of the dack fixtures were carried away one after snother, and the bul-works were completely torn out.

Ospesin Hancock and two men with lines

loshed sround their waists, steggered for-ward with an aze to out away the foremast. It went over the side with a crash, and the wessel righted a little. The men were returning aft when so extra big wave atruck the vessel. First Mac E iward Brown was carried overboard. He was never seen sgair.

The next day the gaie abased some, but the schooner was absolutely helplass. There was nothing for the crew to do but wait and famish. A signal of distress was hoisted, but no sall came in sight. This was on Sep-

There were but a few pounds of provisions and a few gallons of water on the wreck. Each man ate an ounce of food and drank a gill of water the first day. On the evening of the second day, as no sail could be seen, the captain and the four sailors each took the scanty ration allotted. They were suf-fering fearfully already. Then day after day the same story was repeated. The men were dying of hunger and crezed for water. They become so weak that they could ccarcaly move.

On the afternoon of September 24 Captain Hancock saw the smoke of the Siberian. The Little Wonder's signal of distress was seen, and in a shors time the steamer was near. The see was so bigh, however, that it was four hours before the famished craw were taken off. They were too weak help themselves, and Caprain Park, of the Siberlan, told the men to drop into the water and he would pick them up. This was done, and they were taken aboard the steamer and cared for.
